CONTRIBUTORS

Steven Frye is Associate Professor of English at Antelope Valley College in Lancaster, California. He has published articles on Brockden Brown, Simms, Melville, and Fitzgerald in journals such as The Southern Quarterly, Leviathan, and American Studies. He has also published a theory of the novel as historical text in The Centennial Review, and he has contributed a number of articles to The Encyclopedia of American Literature and The Encyclopedia of World Literature.

Samuel Jaeckel is a doctoral student in English at the Claremont Graduate University in Claremont, California. He earned the Master's degree in English at Baylor University. His publications include “In Search of C. S. Lewis’ Narnia on a Platonic Map of Progressive Cognition” in Mythlore (83.1) and “C. S. Lewis and Samuel Johnson’s Rasselas: Hearing the Call of Sehnsucht” in CSL: The Bulletin of the New York C. S. Lewis Society (27.4). He has also presented work on postmodernism at the 1997 South Central Conference on Christianity and Literature at the University of Southwestern Louisiana, as well as the C. S. Lewis Centenary Conference in 1998 at Wheaton College in Wheaton, Illinois. Mr. Jaeckel presently works as a teaching assistant and a writing center consultant at the Claremont Graduate University.

Clay Lancaster has published widely in the field of architecture, and is the author of such works as Old Brooklyn Heights (1961), Prospect Park Handbook (1967), The Architecture of Historic Nantucket (1972), and Vestiges of the Venerable City: A Chronicle of Lexington, Kentucky, Its Architectural Development and Survey of Its Early Streets and Antiquities, which appeared in 1982. In 1966, Mr. Lancaster was appointed the first curator of Frederick Law Olmsted’s New York masterpiece, Prospect Park. In addition to architecture, his scholarly interests include oriental art, reflected in the two editions (1963 and 1983) of The Japanese Influence in America, and he also has found the time to write and illustrate six books for children, including Michiko, or Mrs. Belmont’s Brownstone on Brooklyn Heights (1965), and The Runaway Prince in 1991. In recent years, Mr. Lancaster has produced The Breadths and Depths of East and West: A Survey and Assessment of Civilization Based on Universal Considerations (1995), and is at work on a series of four albums of architectural design, two of which have appeared to date: Architectural Edification (1995), and Architectural Exotica (1997).
