Alumni Rapport

The Dean's office seeks suggestions and assistance in student placement.

Here's what Alums can do.

By Asst. Dean JOSEPH RAUSCH

Since his appointment as Dean of the University of Kentucky College of Law, George Hardy has actively encouraged U.K. law alumni to communicate ideas, suggestions and criticisms to the Dean's Office. All this has been done in an attempt to better serve both our student body and the legal profession by ever improving the quality of the legal education provided by the College of Law. The activity of the Law Alumni Association and the publication of the first issue of The Review are examples of the expanded communication between the College of Law and its graduates.

Of the numerous comments received from U.K. law alumni in response to these efforts, the recurring theme has been: "What can I do to help the College of Law?" After expressing a note of thanks for your support, I think it might be appropriate for me to respond in part to this question.

Recently, I wrote each of you a letter requesting assistance in placing members of our Senior Class in your law firm or governmental agency. The response to date has been satisfactory, but a number of very able lawyers-to-be are still available for permanent employment. Attorneys all too often view the addition of an associate as a drain on their practice, rather than as growth and expansion. I would only ask you again to review your law practice and seriously consider expanding your staff. The Placement Office is eager to assist you in co-ordinating an on-campus interview of members of our Senior Class. If this is not possible, we could inform the Senior Class of the professional opportunity to join your staff and have them contact you directly. Should it be infeasible to hire an associate at this time, you could offer the services of our Placement Office to your fellow attorneys who may be considering expanding their practice. Since strong alumni support is the hallmark of a successful placement program, I cannot overemphasize the important role each of you plays in our placement activities.

U.K. Law Students have not received an exemption from the crunch of inflation. The limited law scholarship funds have already been exhausted for this year, though student expenses for the Spring Semester continue to mount. Many of you received some form of scholarship assistance during law school. Certainly it wasn't much, but as you will remember, every dollar was greatly appreciated. May I suggest that you consider assisting the fledgling members of the legal profession, as you were helped yourself, by making an annual contribution to the U.K. Law Scholarship Fund. One county bar association is considering the establishment of a $500.00 annual scholarship. I would only encourage bar associations throughout the state, and individual law firms where feasible, to consider an annual contribution to the U.K. Law Scholarship Fund.

The continued growth of the Law Alumni Association itself is largely contingent upon your financial support. Over 350 U.K. graduates have become 1974-75 Active Members of the Association. I urge all alumni to help finance the activities of the Association by paying the $10.00 annual dues. I might report that a number of friends of the College of Law, although not U.K. graduates, have become "Supporting Members" of the Association. You might canvass the members of your law firm, or fellow attorneys who might be interested in joining you in supporting the College of Law.

In conclusion, I would only reverse the initial question posed and ask: "What can the College of Law do to help you?" Let us know.
