UK Lawyer New Reds Boss

Because of its location in a city which borders the state, the Cincinnati Reds baseball team has always claimed a substantial Kentucky connection. Thanks to a recent financial transaction of major league proportions, that connection now extends to the University of Kentucky and its law school. William J. Reik, Jr., '64, a New York investment manager paid $1.6 million in July to become a limited partner in the Reds organization. He did it, he said "strictly for the love of the game."

Reik is Managing Director of Mitchell Hutchins Asset Management Inc. in New York. In his role as financial adviser to his clients, he typically steers a conservative course. But in this one personal venture, he threw fiscal caution to the wind. "I don't look at anything about baseball as a business", Reik told Dan Weber of the Kentucky Post in a front page article published August 6, "There's no real logic to it. It's a love. It's a pure thing."

Behind Reik's desk in his Manhattan office are some giveaways to his part-time passion—a pair of full-length posters of Pete Rose and Johnny Bench, a dented Mr. Red wastecan, and an autographed baseball from the 1981 strike year, when the Reds had the best record in baseball but missed the playoffs. There's no question about the new owner's favorite item of memorabilia, however. It's the wastecan. "They don't make them anymore", he said. "It's a true collector's item."

Like many talented lawyers, Bill Reik came to his present career by a circuitous path. He began professional life as a solo practitioner in Northern Kentucky. In pursuit of his business fascination, he soon switched professions, accepting a position with a
President Reagan has approved the appointment of Colonel Dulaney L. O’Roark, Jr. ’60, formerly Commandant of the Judge Advocate General’s School, Charlottesville, VA to the rank of Brigadier General. He has assumed the posts of Chief Judge of the Army Court of Military Review and Commander of the U.S. Army Legal Services Agency.

The son of an Army officer, Gen. O’Roark’s military responsibilities have involved duties as a prosecutor, defense counsel and teacher. At one time he served as the Staff Judge Advocate of the U.S. Army Support Command-Saigon, in Vietnam. He has also been chief of JAG Corps Personnel and Executive in the office of the Army Judge Advocate General, assigned to the Pentagon.

Col. Harry St. G.T. Carmichael III ’65, an army judge advocate for 18 years, has recently been named a judge on the U.S. Army Court of Military Review, that service branch’s sole appellate court. In 1975 he received an LL.M. with highest honors from George Washington University’s National Law Center. He has served in South Vietnam and the Federal Republic of Germany, in addition to several locations stateside.

Col. Carmichael’s classmate, Col. John R. Bozeman, is the Executive officer, Office of The Judge Advocate General, Department of the Army, stationed in the Pentagon. He is a Silver Star recipient. Lt. Col. Owen D. Basham ’67, who was a criminal law instructor at The JAG School, replaced Carmichael as senior legal advisor for the Army command at Fort Richardson, AK.

In July, 1984, Lt. Col. William R. Hagan ’71 became the Deputy Staff Judge Advocate for the 24th Infantry Division (Mechanized) at Fort Stewart, GA. He supervises a 22 lawyer office which services commanders, staff, soldiers and soldiers’ families located at that major installation.

For the three years prior to his current assignment, Col. Hagan was an Associate Professor of Law and Department Executive Officer at the United States Military Academy, West Point, NY. At an earlier time he served a three year tour of duty in Italy, as Deputy Staff Judge Advocate for the Southern European Task Force.

Major General William K. Suter, Assistant Judge Advocate General of the Army, a Kentucky native, left, awarding Colonel Carmichael with the Meritorious Service Medal in July, 1985.
In September, Judge Prentice H. Marshall of the Northern District of Illinois, one of the country’s most highly regarded federal trial judges, visited the College to deliver the Roy R. and Virginia F. Ray lecture. During his stay he conducted several class sessions on criminal law, criminal procedure and civil procedure.

Taking exception to comments made by other federal judges in recent times, the former University of Illinois law teacher and Chicago practitioner described in his lecture the pleasures of being on the bench. Despite having a full load of cases in one of the busiest federal districts, he disputed the assertions many make about being overworked and underpaid. (Judge Marshall is perhaps best known for the trial of Teamster Chief Roy Williams and the series of cases from 1975-84 regarding discrimination within the Chicago police department.)

The Visiting Committee conducted its annual meeting in October, focusing mostly on the proposals before the Kentucky Council on Higher Education regarding legal education, and the College’s administrative structure. At press time their report was still in draft form and not available for release.

On November 14, Bert B. Lockwood, Jr., Professor of Law and Director of the University of Cincinnati College of Law’s Urban Morgan Institute for Human Rights, spoke to Professor Rogers’ International Law class on “Litigating Against Apartheid.” Professor Lockwood described the legal issues involved in a suit currently being brought in New York by a black American dancer for injuries allegedly resulting from discriminatory treatment at the hands of South African government hospitals. He also spoke on the general trends in human rights law and the power that practicing lawyers possess to further law reform in that area.
John Y. Brown '28: "A Man Ahead of His Time"

In June, 1985, John Y. Brown, one of the best known graduates of the College of Law, died following an illness of six months. At the memorial service held at Lexington's Central Christian Church, former Governor Edward T. Breathitt '36 delivered a thoughtful eulogy which captured well the spirit of the man. The full text of his remarks follows.

"As we meet to honor and remember one who served us so faithfully and so well for as long as most of us can remember, I am grateful to have been asked to say a few words in recollection.

"We cannot, of course, honor John Y. Brown as he honored us and all citizens of the Commonwealth by his devotion to causes and principles that made Kentucky a better place in which to live. We cannot thank him adequately. We cannot even describe or define his contributions for they will go on and on, outlasting him — BUT OUTLASTING US AS WELL.

"When the National press reported John's death, the fact that he was the father of a former governor was headlined and stressed. This was good reporting and we can find no argument with this news handling. In recent years, the names of the son and his wife Phyllis have been more prominent than the name of the father. This was a matter of pride and satisfaction to John, Sr., and he would have been pleased to be remembered for giving life, name and inspiration to one who held with distinction Kentucky's highest office. Indeed, if that was all John, Sr. did, we would still be honoring him today. John, Sr., however, had equal pride in and love for his daughters, Dottie, Betty, Dianna and Pamela.

"But further down in his obituary we read of his leadership and his prominence more than half a century ago. We see something of his durability as a public servant—a speaker and majority leader of the State House of Representatives and a Congressman in the historic one hundred days of the first Roosevelt Administration, a member of the legislature again in the 1950s and 1960s. We read of other races for public office and of his reputation as a leading trial attorney.

"It seems to me I have known of John Y. Brown all my life. As a youngster interested in what was going on around me, I could not help hearing him discussed as my elders followed politics with the intensity that seems to be peculiar to Kentuckians. As a college and Law School student, I learned more about him. He was a person to be admired for his intellect, his knowledge of issues and his oratory. He was one to be emulated for his skill as a lawyer.

"It became apparent to me as time went on that there was a man who served his political party and his state well, but who could not be identified with any faction. His loyalty did not seem to be to other politicians but to those he sought to serve. There is no question that this hurt him in support attained from others and in public offices held. There is no question that the stories of the death of John Y. Brown, Sr., might have listed more political victories if he had been less independent politically. It is equally clear, however, that in his independence he performed great public service. He raised issues that needed to be raised. He supported causes that needed to be supported. He asked questions that needed to be asked.

"He called for a sales tax to finance education. He advocated human rights. He opposed capital punishment. He supported conservation of our natural resources. It goes without saying that not all of these stands were popular when he took them in a political campaign or in the legislature.

"He also supported unpopular causes and unpopular defendants in the courtroom, believing that the law should protect as well as punish and that its protection is for all of us, without regard for popular opinion or financial circumstance.

"Governor Brown, I want you to know that you were not the first young governor of Kentucky who was both inspired and sustained by your father. Your relations with him were much closer than any other chief executive, of course. But sixteen years before you went to Frankfort there was another governor trying to do his best in what he considered difficult circumstances — who found your father a source of support and an example of statesmanship. It was much easier to be on the right side of issues and to call for moral solutions to problems, with someone like your father serving in the legislature or coming to visit and offering his counsel.

"John, Sr., was old enough to be my father and I respected his experience and his wisdom. I also respected his youthful outlook, his enthusiasm for life and his energy. Hardly a father figure for me, but a cherished friend. Father figures don't fly their own airplanes or play the kind of golf game he did.

"It was good to have him on your side — but, of course, John Y. wasn't on anybody's side all of the time. If he took another side of an issue, it was best to reexamine your position for you might have been missing something important. If he took your side, it was a pleasure to see him forcefully and artfully disarm your opposition in debate.

"As Majority Leader, John Y. gave one of the best civil rights speeches I have ever heard, in the State House of Representatives in 1966. We passed the most far-reaching civil rights bill ever passed in a southern state up to that time. We will always be grateful for his successful leadership on that historic occasion.

"We say goodbye today to a good and faithful public servant — to a man who was in many ways ahead of his time on public issues, but who lived to see his position proved and vindicated. We say goodbye to a man who did not hesitate to represent the underdog against the rich and powerful. We say goodbye to a man who offered himself and his service generously over a long lifetime — and, in retrospect, we probably would have benefited if we had listened to him more closely. We remember him in the words of Peter Marshall, the Chaplain of the U.S. Senate which John, Sr. often quoted: "I would rather lose in a cause that must eventually win, than win a cause that must eventually fail."

"Let us rejoice in the life of John Y. Brown, Sr. He is gone but he will be with us always here in Kentucky, as long as his principles are defended and the causes he fought for are furthered.

"That is now our task!"

New Faculty Appointments

Two Northeastern practitioners joined the faculty effective with the 1985-86 academic year, both of whom have ties to the Ohio Valley.

M. Tracey Maclin, a graduate of Tufts University and the Columbia University School of Law, is a former law clerk to U.S. Sixth Circuit Court of Appeals Judge Boyce Martin of Louisville. He was an associate with Cahill, Gordon & Reindel in New York City prior to his entry into teaching. Professor Maclin presently teaches in the Constitutional Law area.

The other new faculty member, Emily L. Sherwin, who will offer courses in the property and trust and estates areas, is a native of Cincinnati. She graduated from Lake Forest (IL) College and Boston University School of Law, where she was the Article Editor of the Boston University Law Review. Professor Sherwin, too, is a former law clerk, having served in that capacity with Chief Justice Edward F. Hennessey of the Supreme Judicial Court of Massachusetts. Immediately prior to joining the faculty she was associated with Csaplar & Bok in Boston.
Successful Businessman Featured

Ronalco, Inc., a Louisville-based firm which manufactures industrial furnace components, was featured in the Courier-Journal's business section in November as a manufacturing concern whose fortunes were running counter to the national trend for such industries. David Cooper '76 is half owner of the company and its vice president.

Ronalco's ceramic-fiber technology has been characterized by Ceramic Industry, a trade journal, as being at the leading edge of its market. The firm is opening a California office, adding to its present locations in Owensboro and Northern Kentucky. It has bid on a porcelain-enameling plant in the Republic of China and is also entering the area of abrasion-resistant materials and systems. The company's 1984 revenues were a record $5.1 million.

New Annual Fund Chairman Named

Law Alumni President Jennifer B. Coffman has appointed William R. Garmer '75 to a two-year term as chairman of the College of Law Annual Fund. A member of the College's Lafferty Society, Garmer is in the first year of his term on the Law Alumni Association's Board of Directors.

Bill Garmer was the plaintiff's lawyer in Hilen v. Hays, a 1984 Kentucky Supreme Court case which adopted comparative negligence. He is a frequent lecturer on the CLE circuit and periodically offers a course in Litigation Skills at the College. In addition, he serves on several ABA, KBA, KATA and ATLA committees.

The new chairman sees several goals for the school in the next two years. "Expanding the base of private funding for the school must continue to be the first priority of its friends and alumni," said Garmer. "Though our contributions now equal a commendable 12% of the overall budget, we need to aim for a much higher proportion, if we are to achieve the level of quality attained by the Universities of Michigan and Virginia, to which the College aspires."

A partner in the Lexington litigation firm of Savage, Garmer & Elliott, Garmer has a special interest in helping the school excel in teaching trial skills. "Along with generating additional support for the Matthews professorship fund, the Mineral Law Center, and other recently instituted projects, I would like to see an endowment devoted to sponsoring special work in the trial area. If we can get a 'cornerstone' gift, I am convinced that many lawyers would join in supporting it generously."

As this issue was going to press in late December, Chairman Garmer reported that annual fund receipts had topped $150,000 and deferred commitments through the Lafferty Society totaled more that $250,000.

Elected at the June meeting of the Law Alumni Association along with Coffman were three officers and twelve members of the board of directors, nine of them new. Judge William S. Cooper '70 was selected as vice-president, Barbara B. Edelman '77 as treasurer, and Carroll D. Stevens continued as secretary. New board members include Leslie D. Aberson '60, Louisville; V. Jeffery Alston '83, Louisville; William G. Deatherage, Jr. '73, Hopkinsville; Sidney B. Douglass '68, Harlan; William R. Garmer '75, Lexington; J.B. Johnson, Jr. '61, Williamsburg; David G. Powell '69, Washington, DC; and Judge Anthony M. Wilhoit '63, Versailles. Persons elected to the board in 1985 serve until the 1987 annual meeting.

Converted to a Permanent Endowment in 1985

First Stage Goal: $30,000

... a native of Eastern Kentucky, born in Oneida, raised in Manchester, educated at Eastern Kentucky University, and a graduate posthumously of the University of Kentucky College of Law.

... to his classmates and other friends he was known as Bill Ed, a typical small-town, rural Kentuckian — friendly, down to earth, full of compassion, gracious, warm, totally unassuming, genuine. He was very easy to like, a joy to know, a real friend.

... Bill Ed Mills proved that the length of one’s life is no measure of its worth. He touched those who knew him, was an inspiration to his contemporaries, and he possessed strong ideals and personal qualities. He left memories that will last throughout the lives of those he called friends.

William Edward Mills 1944-1969

About the Endowment. Income from the William Edward Mills Scholarship Fund will provide for full tuition scholarships, awarded annually to needy and deserving students at the UK College of Law. Though gifts can be made to the Fund at any time in the future, an initial three-year goal of $30,000 has been established, which if achieved will ensure that first awards are made in the 1988-89 academic year. Law school classmates and contemporaries of Bill Ed Mills will be solicited first for the Fund; thereafter it will be open for contributions from any interested alumnus or friend.
Is the UK College of Law in Your Will?

A gift by bequest is a way to perpetuate your support for the University of Kentucky. A will gift of significant size can ensure the establishment of a named endowment fund to support any area of special need.

By naming the UK College of Law as a will beneficiary, heirs can benefit as well as the University: a charitable gift is wholly deductible from the adjusted gross estate and often places the total of taxable assets in a lower tax bracket. A variety of charitable testamentary trusts can be employed whereby a source of income is protected for one's heirs, while at the same time making a permanent gift of the corpus to UK.

For further information about bequests and a variety of other methods of planned giving, contact the Dean or Terry Mobley, Director of University Development.

Errata

The names of Robert E. Wheeler and Howard Trent were inadvertently omitted from the list of University Sponsors appearing in the '84 Annual Fund Report portion of the previous issue. Both gifts were designated for the W. L. Matthews, Jr. Memorial Fund.
