Wang donates record $160,000 gift

Wang Laboratories, Inc. and Informatics, Inc. have donated to the College of Law computing equipment and software with a total value of $160,000, the largest single gift ever received by the College. With this equipment, not only has the school greatly expanded its internal computer capability, but also faculty will be able to teach College of Law students how to use computers in the practice of law.

According to Associate Dean Paul Van Booven, who worked closely with Wang and Informatics in implementing the gift, "The College will now be able to integrate computer concepts into existing courses, as well as create new courses in law office management and technology." Also, the College plans to make the equipment available for demonstrations to alumni and others in the legal profession interested in learning more about how computers can help them in their practice.

The major gift from Wang Laboratories is a mini-computer, which will support up to 32 printers and workstations. Wang also donated IBM-compatible software which includes a very sophisticated inter-office and inter-University electronics mail communication system. In addition, the College will receive software that can access Lexis, a nationwide database for legal research materials. Many of the school's internal functions will be made more efficient by the Wang gift, from word processing and student and alumni record keeping to faculty research.

The most direct benefit to students will flow from the educational capabilities of the Informatics software. The College has received an all-encompassing legal time management program for billing and attorney time management, a docket control and firm calendar program for reminders of meetings, court dates, and other deadlines and a conflicts of interest checking program.

In order to best utilize the Informatics system, a special suite of offices has been equipped on the second floor of the College as a model law office. With the demonstration database included in the software package, students can get a feel for the many problems presented in legal practice by potential time and client conflicts. The system can be integrated into the litigation skills course and professional ethics classes. Also, the College of Law may establish a course in law office management, in which the new computer system would play a major role.

The Wang equipment and Informatics software were unveiled at a dedication ceremony held at the College of Law on Thursday, October 8, 1987. University of Kentucky President David Roselle announced the gift. A number of officers and representatives from Wang Laboratories and Informatics attended the ceremony, including Gary Daichendt, Regional Director for Wang Labs, and Jerry Prine, Territory Manager for Informatics, Inc.

Dean's Report

Note: The following is taken from remarks delivered by Dean Lawson at the 1987 Annual Alumni Banquet at the Bar Convention in Louisville.

In my five years as dean I have not made a comprehensive report on the status of the College to the alumni. I know of your great interest in the welfare of the school and would like to take a few minutes to tell you how things have gone and how they promise to go in the future. At the outset I should warn you that I do not share the feelings of despair about education in Kentucky which seem to dominate public discussion on the subject. Predictions of doom and gloom have filled the airwaves and newsprint of Kentucky for so long that one can easily get the impression that there is no quality to be found anywhere in the system. I do not mean to say that higher education in general is perfectly robust and healthy in Kentucky. But I do mean to say that the College of Law has never been better, is very solid by any meaningful standard of measurement, and is in a position to move toward honest-to-goodness excellence in the near future.

Obviously my opinions are biased, if for no other reason than the fact that I have spent most of my professional life in the College. Fortunately, I am not left to rely on my own personal opinions in reporting to you on the status of the school. Two years ago, the College had its regular seven-year reaccreditation inspection by the American Bar Association and the Association of American Law Schools. The inspection team came from some solid law schools around the country and spent three days looking at every facet of our program. At the end of this exercise, the College received very high marks and an inspection report which was clearly superior to anything we have received during my two decades in the school. At about this same time, the state's Council on Higher Education undertook a fairly comprehensive and careful review of Kentucky's professional education programs. The state's three law schools were laid side-by-side and end-to-end for assessments of quality. And from this exercise as well our College emerged with flying colors and a much higher and more widely-held regard for its quality.

There are more reasons for these excellent evaluations of the College than I can describe in a brief period of time. But I can highlight at least the most important ones.

The most important ingredient in any kind of educational program is the faculty. If you put a competent and dedicated teacher in a class room in any part of the system, you will see nothing but good things happen. It is my firm belief that we have assembled in our school a first-rate faculty which takes its teaching responsibilities very seriously. Evidence of high quality instruction comes from a wide variety of sources.

Our teachers and our courses are evaluated in writing by the student body every semester. These evaluations are done anonymously under circumstances designed to assure reliability. I have read thousands of them over the past five years and I can tell you that the students of the College have an extraordinarily high regard for the competence and performance of their teachers. Time and again, for five years running, they have rated the faculty consistently and uniformly superb.

In this regard I am reminded of something that happened last fall when the College Visiting Committee was on campus. As a routine part of its annual visit, this committee meets privately with a fairly sizeable group of students who occupy various positions of leadership in the student body. Following this most recent meeting, one of the members of the committee expressed delight and a bit of surprise at the glowing report by the students about their professors and commented that a meeting of that sort during his era in the school would surely have produced an array of negative comments about the faculty. I had a similar experience with the chairman of the ABA/AALS inspection team at the conclusion of the reaccreditation visit. He described an extraordinary level of student satisfaction with the educational experience offered here and noted that this makes a strong statement about the quality of the faculty. I agree.

The quality of the faculty is demonstrated in other ways as well. A steady stream of articles in the country's best law journals shows a commitment to scholarship, as does the fact that six professors (or one-quarter of the total) are nearing the conclusion of work on book projects. On a regular basis members of the faculty are invited to teach as visiting professors at some of the best law schools in the country. One faculty member was on leave last year as a professor-in-residence with the Internal Revenue Service and another is teaching this year in the People's Republic of China as a Fulbright Fellow.

For a long time a highly qualified student body has been one of our strengths. That has not changed at all over the last five years. Our school is still the one of choice by most Kentuckians who decide to pursue the study of law. We lose some very fine resident students to law schools in other states and are trying to do something to minimize this loss. But we continue to have a very strong resident application pool.

For this year's entering class we had about 800 applications. This was about 25% more than for the previous year, an increase which far exceeded the increase in applications to all law schools in the country. From that pool we enrolled 163 students. Our 1987 entering class is probably the strongest we have ever had.

In specific ways, it is possible to see the consequences of mixing highly promising students with a very strong faculty. As you know, most of the 200 law schools in the country participate in a national moot court competition each year. Last year our team competed against teams from the most reputable law schools in the nation and did so very successfully. We won the regional competition, made it to the final four teams before losing in the national round, and on the way to that success defeated the ultimate national winner.

In recent years, our students have demonstrated an ability to compete successfully in the work place against students from anywhere. Law firms and other employers who come to school to recruit are delighted with the graduates from our College. Placement opportunities have never been better for our students. Nor have they ever had such a wide geographical distribution. Over 20% of the most recent graduating class found positions with law firms and other employers outside Kentucky. Word about the quality of our program and our graduates is spreading rapidly to other parts of the country. The performance of our graduates is doing wonders for the reputation of the College.

We had the very first organized continuing legal education program in Kentucky. We were fortunate for about a dozen years to have had John Hickey at the helm of this important program. His retirement a year ago was a cause of great concern for me because of the quality he had been able to build and maintain in our efforts to serve the ongoing educational needs of lawyers and judges. Fortunately, with considerable assistance from John, we attracted Todd Eberle to the school as the new director of our program. My fears have been put to rest, to say the least.

The quality of our CLE seminars, as evaluated by those who attend, is uniformly high. Our regional seminars (which we conduct in conjunction with the Kentucky Bar Association CLE Commission) continue to serve great numbers of lawyers throughout Kentucky by providing low cost opportunities for continuing education. Our equine law seminar and our intensive trial advocacy offering have established strong reputations for quality in Kentucky and beyond.

The Council on Higher Education has long prohibited subsidy from state resources for continuing education of all types. Because of this we have experienced financial hardship since the beginning of our efforts to provide this benefit to the bench and bar. This has begun to change. The popularity of our seminars, the advent of mandatory CLE in Kentucky, and the efficiency of our CLE Office, have combined to generate financial stability in this part of our program. We are even beginning to think about the possibility of adding some new components to our CLE service. This year we started a project which we hope will culminate in the publication of some high quality handbooks for the practicing lawyers of Kentucky. And, at some point in time, we would like to find a way to offer some special programs in judicial education. I believe that the College of Law has something special to offer in this area which would serve the judiciary well and benefit the citizens of the Commonwealth.

The College of Law Mineral Law Center is only four years old. It was created for the purpose of giving some special attention and focus to an industry and an area of law having particular importance to Kentucky. We are pleased with the progress made thus far and look forward to even better things in the future.

One of the things we sought to do in the development of the Center was curriculum enrichment. We are not at the end of the road on this process but we have added a course in coal mining law and one in natural resources taxation. We continue to offer the survey course in mineral law that we had prior to the Center and have talked about the possibility of adding a course in oil and gas when we can.

Over a year ago we created a new law journal in the Mineral Law Center. It is called the Journal of Mineral Law and Policy and has been well received in the short period of its existence. In addition to providing an outlet for the scholarly research generated through the Center, this Journal (like the much older Kentucky Law Journal) provides students of the College with an opportunity for a very special educational experience. This past year the Center completed work on a three-volume set of books on Kentucky mineral law which should prove highly beneficial to mineral law practitioners.

Through these publications and other activities, the Mineral Law Center has brought some added regional and national attention to the College. Just recently, for example, all of the natural resources law professors in the country met at our school for three days to address issues of common interest. Those in attendance were highly impressed with the work of the Center and with the law school in general.

The most important development in the recent history of the College was a decision made 10 years ago by Tom Lewis (who was then serving as dean) to develop a partnership with alumni for the purpose of working toward improvement of the College. He formulated and implemented a plan for a College Visiting Committee and invested the time and energy necessary to make the Law Alumni Association a more effective support organization for the benefit of the College. Absent this decision, I would certainly not be in a position to give you a positive report about the state of the school. The advances made by the College over the last five years are undoubtedly tied to a remarkable increase in alumni interest and involvement in the life of the school.

The Law Alumni Association is stronger than it has ever been. The Board of Directors of the Association works very closely with the dean and others in the College on a variety of tasks, all designed to upgrade the quality of our program. The College Visiting Committee has been an invaluable source of ideas and support, both with the University administration and with individuals and entities outside the institution. Individual alumni are involved heavily in the work of our Continuing Legal Education Program as well as our Mineral Law Center.

In addition to time, energy, and ideas, the alumni of the College have provided indispensable financial support over the last five years. I can say without hesitation that this support has been absolutely critical to the health of our program. In its absence we would have watched the quality of the school wither away; with it we have made noticeable progress toward excellence. It is clear that the state of Kentucky will not or cannot provide sufficient resources for high quality legal education. I have not seen any benefit in complaining loudly about this fact, as others have done, nor have I seen any sense in waiting for the situation to change. We decided a few years ago to see if we could help ourselves with this problem and the response to our efforts has been tremendously encouraging.

Five years ago the College of Law had no funded professorships, the absence of which put us at a great disadvantage in attempting to attract and retain a strong faculty. As most of you know, Wendell Cherry gave us an opportunity for a breakthrough on this front and we took full advantage of it. We now have five endowed professorships at $100,000 each, a development which is directly responsible for the enhancement in quality of the faculty. Five years ago we also had almost no funds for student financial aid, this in the face of increasing tuition and fierce competition among schools for students of high quality. This year, we granted far more scholarship aid than we have ever granted before, largely because of scholarship donations made by alumni. Alumni scholarship support is directly responsible for the strength of this year’s entering class.

Private giving to the College has grown every year since we initiated a formal fundraising program. In 1986, our most recent fund year, the College received almost $350,000 in gifts. In addition, a significant number of alumni joined the Lafferty Society with a pledge of $10,000 in gifts over a 10-year period. We presently have more than 150 Lafferty Society members, a number which substantially exceeds what anyone would have believed possible five years ago.

Perhaps the most important thing about our private support is that the resulting program improvements are not going to slip away from us. We have concentrated our efforts on developing endowments, judging this to be the best path to permanent improvements in the quality of our program. We are beginning to see the lasting benefits of this approach. Seven or eight years ago, we had almost no endowment in the College of Law. At the present time we have total endowments which will soon approach the figure of $2 million. This is remarkable support considering the time frame in which it has come about. The alumni of the College deserve credit for this development and the gratitude of everyone associated with the school.

I have given you a very positive impression of what is happening at the school because I feel very optimistic about the future. I do not intend to imply that we are in a position to rest on our laurels or to think that the job of making the College a truly exceptional institution is finished. But we have made a good start and we have every reason to believe that even greater strides lie just beyond the horizon.

Judge Abner Mikva Delivers Ray Lecture

The Honorable Abner J. Mikva of the United States Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit visited the College of Law in November to deliver the fifth biennial Roy and Virginia Ray Lecture. Judge Mikva was appointed to the D.C. Circuit Court of Appeals by President Jimmy Carter in 1979 after serving several terms in the U.S. House of Representatives. His brethren on that court include Robert Bork and Douglas Ginsburg.

The Ray lecture was held on Thursday evening, November 5, 1987, in the College of Law courtroom. Judge Mikva spoke on, “The Political Question Doctrine Revisited.” Drawing on his experience both as a judge and as a member of Congress, Judge Mikva articulated his belief that truly political questions are best settled in the give and take of the legislative process, rather than by the courts. He stated that the upheavals sometimes caused in the political process are important to reaching a national consensus on divisive issues, which may not occur when political questions are settled by the judiciary. A spirited question and answer session followed the lecture. The text of Judge Mikva’s remarks are to be published in an upcoming issue of the Kentucky Law Journal.

Judge Mikva captivated both students and faculty during his visit. He was available throughout his two-day stay, making presentations to a number of classes on various topics and meeting informally with both student groups and faculty members. On Wednesday, November 4, James Newberry ’81 took Judge Mikva on a tour of Airdrie Stud horse farm. A dinner in the Judge’s honor with faculty and the College of Law Visiting Committee followed the lecture on Thursday.

The Roy and Virginia Ray Lectureships in Law were endowed in 1977 by Roy R. Ray ’28 and his wife Virginia, a graduate of the University of Kentucky College of Home Economics. Mr. Ray is a Professor Emeritus at the Southern Methodist University School of Law. The purpose of the lecture series, to enrich the educational experience for students, faculty and community, was well served by Judge Mikva’s visit.
James W. Lambert '41 and James H. Lambert have consolidated their offices with that of Michael Louis Duncan. The new firm of Lambert, Lambert & Duncan will have offices on Church Street in Mt. Vernon and Bogle Street in Somerset.

Scott D. Breckinridge '41, author of The CIA and the U.S. Intelligence System, was among the writers invited to display their work at the Kentucky Book Fair, held at the Kentucky Department for Libraries and Archives in Frankfort. Also a part of that event were Harry M. Caudill '48 and William H. Cunningham '69 (see news items below).

Harry M. Caudill '48 of Whitesburg, recently published a new book, Slender is the Tale: Tales from a Country Law Office, that vividly portrays the practice of law in Eastern Kentucky. Caudill retired from his practice ten years ago. He currently is working on a history of Kentucky.

John A. Duncan '51 has relocated his law offices to 489 East Main Street, Suite 300, Lexington.

Frederick E. Nichols '51 worked with other citizens of Madisonville to put together a constitutional symposium on the subject "James Madison: A Symposium on the U.S. Constitution." The panel included such constitutional experts as Professor Lance Banning of UK, Professor Robert Alley of the University of Richmond, Professor C. Edwin Baker of the University of Pennsylvania and Pulitzer-Prize winning author Edwin Yoder, Jr. The symposium was the first event of Madisonville's "James Madison Days" celebration and was broadcast on Kentucky Educational Television.

William E. Gary III '63 has accepted the position of Vice President and General Counsel with The Pinkerton Tobacco Company. He was formerly a member of the Owensboro firm of Holbrook, Gary, Wible & Sullivan, P.S.C. The firm has been renamed Holbrook, Wible, Sullivan & Helmers, adding the name of John Helmers '66, a shareholder and member of the firm’s Board of Directors.

Julian B. Heron Jr. '65 has been elected a Fellow of the American Bar Foundation. The Fellows is an honorary organization which recognizes lawyers who have demonstrated outstanding dedication to the welfare of their communities and the principles of the legal profession. Heron is a partner in the Washington, D.C. firm of Heron, Burchette, Ruckert & Rothwell.

Kentucky Assistant Attorney General Robert V. Bullock '66 has been reappointed to head the Consumer Protection Division. Among his accomplishments while head of the division from 1968 to 1980 was to help draft the Commonwealth's Consumer Protection Act.

David W. Crumbo '67, former Circuit Court Judge for Floyd County, Indiana, is now a member of the firm of Brown, Todd & Heyburn.

Travis Combs, Jr. '69 has formed a partnership for the general practice of law with several other attorneys under the name of Smith, Williamson, Simpson, Combs & Theiss. The new firm will have offices on West Main Street in LaGrange.

William H. Cunningham '69 and Thomas D. Clark, former professor of history at UK, recently had published a volume on Kentucky history entitled Kentucky's Thomas D. Clark. The book is styled as a conversation between Clark and Cunningham, in which history is interwoven with great storytelling. Cunningham has authored two books on the history of Western Kentucky.

Commonwealth Land Title Insurance Company has named Alan O. Bryant '70 as its Southeast Regional Manager. From his Louisville office Bryant will oversee operations in Kentucky, Tennessee, North Carolina, South Carolina and Georgia.

Judge William S. Cooper '70, past president of the Law Alumni Association, has garnered another title—that of "Divorce King of Kentucky." According to the state's Bureau of Vital Statistics, in his years as a circuit court judge for Hardin County, Cooper has divorced more couples than any other judge in Kentucky. When interviewed by the Elizabethtown News-Enterprise, Cooper projected that "If I stay in this job, it'll take me about 40 years to divorce everyone in Hardin County."

A group of attorneys including Carson P. Porter '70 and R. Thomas Carter '80 have formed a new firm under the name of Porter, Riley, Bardenwerper & Carter. The firm will concentrate its practice in the areas of health care and land use law and has offices at Suite 110, The Summit, 4350 Brownsboro Road, Louisville. Porter and Carter were formerly with Rice, Porter, Seiler & Price.

Chas. J. Brannen '71 has been named Vice President of Structured Settlement Services with Marsh & McLennan Incorporated of New York City.

Arthur J. Bryson '72 has opened his office for the practice of law at 376 South Broadway in Lexington. He was formerly Vice President & Trust Officer for Commerce National Bank.

Stephen D. Driesler '73 is now Senior Vice President for Governmental Affairs for the National Association of Realtors. Formerly he worked in a similar position for the National Multi-Housing Council after serving for several years as administrative assistant to Rep. Larry Hopkins. As chief lobbyist for the NAR's 750,000 membership, Driesler's responsibilities include guiding a political action committee that usually ranks first in the amount of its contributions to federal political candidates nationwide.

Robert W. McKinley '73 has relocated his office to 821 North Bridge Street, Chippewa Falls, Wisconsin 54729.

Stites and Harbison has announced that J. David Porter '73, Stephen M. Ruschell '74 and Kenneth W. Smith '74 of the firm's Lexington office and W. Patrick Stallard '74 of the Louisville office have been elected to the partnership.

William E. Doll, Jr. '74, former legislative counsel to the Kentucky Medical Association, has become associated with Jackson, Kelly, Williams & Palmore in its newly-opened Frankfort office.
Ralph T. McDermott '74 has relocated his office for the general practice of law to Suite 505, Price Building, P.O. Box 568, Ashland.

David A. Koenig '75 has merged his Florence practice with the firm of Rouse & Benson, P.S.C. of Walton. The new firm of Rouse, Benson & Koenig, P.S.C. will maintain offices in both locations. Asa M. Rouse '83 and Mills Rouse '80 are also members of the firm.

Dinsmore & Shohl announced that Joseph E. Conley, Jr. '77 and Carl J. Stich, Jr. '80 have been admitted to the partnership, effective July 1, 1987.

Philip G. Royalty '77 has become a partner with the national accounting firm of Ernst & Whinney in its Washington, D.C. office.

Michael M. Hooper '78 has taken a position with the United States District Court Clerk in Chattanooga, Tennessee. He was formerly acting director for discipline with the Kentucky Bar Association.

Vickie Yates Brown '79 has become a member of the firm of Greenebaum, Young, Treitz & Maggiolo of Louisville.

Matthew J. Fritz '79 has become associated with the tax department of Kennedy, Holland, DeLacy & Svoboda in Omaha, Nebraska. Previously he served as senior trial attorney for the Omaha office of the district counsel of the Internal Revenue Service.

Wyatt, Tarrant & Combs has announced that J. Mark Burton '80 has been elected to the partnership, effective January 1, 1988.

Shirley A. Cunningham '80 has opened an office for the private practice of law at 1035 North Limestone in Lexington. Previously, Cunningham served as Vice President for Commercial Lending with Bank One of Lexington.

The firm of Vance, Bruches & Goss of Bryan, Texas has elected C. Randall Michel '80 to the partnership.

David W. Seewer '81 has become associated with the Louisville firm of Popkin, Stern & Meyer. He was formerly with Brown, Todd & Heyburn's Louisville office.

Leon Shadowen '81 has become associated with the firm of Mays & Valentine of Richmond, Virginia. He previously served as attorney-advisor to Judge Edna G. Parker of the United States Tax Court.

Roy D. Wasson '81 has opened an office for the practice of law in the areas of appellate and general civil litigation at Courthouse Tower, Suite 402, 44 West Flagler Street, Miami, Florida. He was formerly with the Miami firm of Kimbrell & Hamann, P.A.

David B. Redwine ’73, Winchester, Kentucky.

Dale D. Brodkey ’78, Omaha, Nebraska.
Homecoming Reception

October 3, 1987
The practice of law attracts people from diverse backgrounds with a great variety of talents and interests. This is nowhere more obvious than in looking at the College of Law’s first-year class, the Class of 1990. In the fall of 1987, 163 students entered the College, many directly from undergraduate school, but a number having already been successful in other fields.

Forty-five undergraduate institutions are represented by the members of the Class of 1990, 16 of them in Kentucky. The University of Kentucky claims the largest number, having graduated 56 members of the class. Other major feeder schools are Transylvania University, Centre College, Western Kentucky University and Kentucky State University. Out-of-state schools include Yale University, the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill and SUNY-NY, along with 26 other institutions.

Many members of the class hold degrees in undergraduate majors traditional to law students, such as political science (34 students), history (23), English (18) and government (8). Another sizable group (24) have an accounting, business, finance or economics background. A variety of other areas of study are represented — biology, theatre, pharmacy, agriculture, philosophy, journalism and telecommunications, for example. Fifty-eight students (35.6%) are women; seven (4.3%) are from minority groups. The average undergraduate GPA for the Class of 1990 is a 3.3; the average LSAT score is 34.

But perhaps the best way to portray the diversity of backgrounds and range of talents among the Class of 1990 is to look not at averages, but at individuals.

According to Associate Dean Paul Van Booven, who chaired the Admissions Committee last year, the 1987 entering class includes:

- A medical doctor.
- An investment banker.
- A licensed pilot and geo-physicist.
- A former golfer pro.
- A former art therapist at a psychiatric hospital.
- A varsity tennis player.
- The vice president of the UK Young Democrats.
- The captain of the Vanderbilt varsity basketball team.
- The captain of the men’s varsity basketball team at Paducah Community College.
- The former Miss Jackson County.
- A former professor of English at Pikeville College.
- A substitute teacher.
- A person with a top secret weapons clearance at the Blue Grass Army Supply Depot.
- A former Navy Officer who taught at the Surface Warfare School.
- A former Peace Corp volunteer.
- The Captain of the UK “Dance Cats.”
- A former athletic trainer for the Indianapolis Colts.
- The Captain of the Western Kentucky University Swim Team.
- A former commercial banking officer for a large Louisville bank.
- A former owner and manager of an ice cream parlor.
- A Fayette County Constable.
- A black belt in karate.
- The recipient of the Outstanding Junior and Senior Economics Student Award at Georgetown College.
- The recipient of Kentucky Wesleyan’s best political science student award for two years running.
- The Intramural Billiards Champion at Transylvania (and a Thomas Jefferson Scholar there).
- A dietician and Army Reserve Captain.
- A former reader for Ed Pritchard, one of Kentucky’s elder statesmen and advocate for higher education, who was blind in his later years.
- A CPA.
- A former computer programmer.
- A former service station manager.
- A former professor at Prestonsburg Community College.
- A rugby player.
- A student who wrote his senior thesis at Princeton University on “Prohibition in Kentucky.”
- A student whose ambition is to write a biography of John F. Kennedy.
- The editor for three years of the Alice Lloyd College yearbook.

Willburt D. Ham Fund Created

A new College of Law endowment fund has been created to honor Professor Emeritus Willburt D. Ham, who retired in 1986 after almost forty years in the classroom.

The Willburt D. Ham Endowment Fund is designed to focus on two truly unique aspects of Professor Ham's long and distinguished career—his concern for the welfare of his students and his excellence in the classroom. Monies raised will go first to endow the Willburt D. Ham Professorship, with the balance of the endowment used to fund scholarships to deserving students. The goal of the College is to enlist participation in the fund by as many as possible of Burt Ham's more than 3,000 former students.

The Willburt D. Ham Fund will be the centerpiece of the College of Law Fund Drive in 1987 and 1988. To honor Professor Ham, and join the growing number of law alumni who are committed to helping the school, send your donation to the College of Law, University of Kentucky, 40506.

Your check can be made out to the College of Law and designated for the Burt Ham Fund.

College of Law Initiates Development Council

The College of Law has formed an alumni Development Council to build on the increasing success of the College's annual fund drive. In previous years, an annual fund chair was appointed to help contact alumni about the fund. But with the growing number of alumni who support the College, Dean Lawson and the Board of the Law Alumni Association felt that the job had become too much for one person.

Members of the Development Council will work with the Law Alumni Board, Dean Lawson and Associate Dean Vansant to encourage participation in the school's Annual Fund. The Council also will meet annually for members to share their thoughts about alumni support for the College. Some of the members of the Law Alumni board have agreed to serve on the Development Council as well, to promote communication between the two groups.

At the inaugural meeting of the Council held in October of 1987, William R. Garmer '75 of Lexington was elected its chair.

Other members of the Development Council include:

Leslie D. Aberson '60 Louisville
David M. Andrews '80 Lexington
Jennifer B. Coffman '78 Lexington
Marie Alagia Cull '79 Frankfort

The College of Law's greatest resource for placing students and new graduates is its alumni. The success of UK law graduates in various fields and locations has meant an increase each year in the number of employers seeking to hire College of Law students.

Most UK law students clerk for, and take permanent positions with, Kentucky law firms and corporate law departments that already include a number of College of Law graduates. Some have followed UK alumni to out-of-state firms. A smaller number of students continue the College's tradition of public service in positions with state and federal government agencies, public interest organizations and as judicial law clerks.

Employers can reach UK law students by having a job listing posted on the placement bulletin board or by attending any of the several recruiting conferences in which the College participates. But perhaps the best way to recruit College of Law students is to schedule an on-campus visit for job interviews with interested students.

The on-campus interview program, held both in the fall and again in the spring, gives the employer the opportunity to talk with interested students face to face, in an atmosphere that promotes a relaxed, complete evaluation of each student. Employers may post specific requirements for the students they wish to interview, and the students use those statements to "self-screen" in deciding whether to interview with that employer.

In the fall of 1987, 68 employers from Kentucky and seven other states interviewed on campus with second and third-year College of Law students. On-campus interviewing will take place again in the spring of 1988, beginning February 4 and ending April 22, when classes end as well. In the spring, students from all three classes are available for interviews.

Recruiting conferences are an increasingly popular option in the legal job market. Employers save time and money by being able to interview a number of students from several different schools in one location. For more than ten years UK has been a member of the Southeastern Law Placement Consortium, which sponsors the nation's largest recruitment conference held in Atlanta each fall. Employers from all over the country come to interview students from UK and ten other southeastern law schools. At the 1987 SELPC conference, representatives from 168 legal employers and more than 600 law students were in attendance. The 1988 conference will take place on Friday, September 30 and Saturday, October 1.

Because of the sizeable registration fee and the expense involved in traveling to Atlanta for two days, the SELPC conference traditionally has been attended only by the larger legal employers. In February of 1988, the College of Law will participate for the first time in the Mid-South Law Placement Consortium recruiting conference, designed to meet the needs of smaller law firms and public interest employers.

The Mid-South conference will be held in Nashville on Saturday, February 27, 1988. A modest registration fee is charged, and the conference is designed so that interviewers spend at most one night in Nashville.

Employers interview only with the students they select from those who sign up to interview with them. A number of first, second and third-year students from UK plan to attend the conference, along with students from the University of Tennessee College of Law, Memphis State University School of Law, Cumberland School of Law, the University of Alabama School of Law, Georgia State University College of Law and Mercer University School of Law.

Next fall the first Southeastern Law Schools Minority Job Fair will be held in Atlanta on Saturday, October 15. Employers will have the opportunity to interview with second and third-year minority law students from a large number of southeastern law schools, including UK. In November, the Southeastern Public Interest Job Fair will take place, also in Atlanta, for public interest employers around the country.

The Placement Office assists alumni in the job market as well as students. The office posts listings for experienced attorneys, and publishes a monthly placement newsletter for alumni seeking to change jobs. Alumni who advise the placement office of their specific interests may be notified in advance of the newsletter about openings that suit their particular needs.

Alumni who are interested in recruiting College of Law students, or who would like to know more about any of our placement services, should contact Associate Dean Drusilla W. Vansant, Room 261 College of Law Building, Lexington, Kentucky 40506-0048 (phone 606-257-8320).

At the dedication, President Roselle thanked the representatives from Wang and Informatics for the gift, which he said "reflects the kind of private support of education which can truly make a difference." Dean Robert Lawson added, "Wang and Informatics have given the law school a complete, state-of-the-art computer system that will allow us to introduce students to technological innovations while still in law school. We know of no other law school in the nation that has a system that even approaches this one."

Alumni interested in learning more should contact Associate Dean Paul Van Booven at (606) 257-8321.

The CLE Report

The Office of Continuing Legal Education at the College of Law concluded its 1986-87 fiscal year with record total income, exceeding budget in both seminars and publications. This was done while holding expenditures to $3,000 under budget allotment. Thus, the program continues to operate as a self-supporting office of the College of Law. It is hoped that the successes of the past year can be used to provide an increasing amount and variety of services to Kentucky lawyers.

The 1987-88 year is off to a good start. The Fall Football Weekend Workshops have been well received. This series of four Saturday morning, three-hour CLE sessions prior to Kentucky football games is the first series of the Fall Weekend Workshops, and we are already looking forward to a similar series for 1988.

Our first two UK/CLE PRACTICE HANDBOOKS have been published and additional titles are planned for the coming year. The first of these practice handbooks, Federal Criminal Practice, was produced as a joint effort by Illinois, Kentucky, Pennsylvania and Massachusetts. The second, Basic Personal Injury Anatomy, is of particular interest to personal injury, workers’ compensation, and general practitioners. Standard format for the practice handbook series consists of separately authored chapters compiled and sequenced for comprehensive coverage of a subject. The looseleaf format will enable UK/CLE to provide supplements for each volume, and the complete index at the end of each book will enable Kentucky practitioners to utilize the handbooks efficiently.

With the expansion of mandatory continuing legal education to 28 states, the Office of Continuing Legal Education has made a concerted effort to acquire "accredited sponsor status” with mandatory CLE states. To date UK/CLE has been qualified as an accredited sponsor for mandatory continuing legal education in 19 states including Alabama, Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Iowa, Kansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Oklahoma, South Carolina, Tennessee, Vermont, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, Wisconsin, and Wyoming. The Office has also received accreditation for many of its seminars from the Kentucky State Board of Accountancy which administers the mandatory continuing education requirements mandated for Certified Public Accountants in Kentucky.

The CLE staff, UK Law alumni, and members of the faculty of the College of Law again enjoyed traveling to western Kentucky (Paducah), eastern Kentucky (Paintsville) and northern Kentucky (Fort Mitchell) to present our annual regional programs in August 1987. UK/CLE looks forward to continuing that tradition in 1988 in hopes that UK Law Alumni can take advantage of our regional programs where we visit your locality in the future.

The Office of Continuing Legal Education welcomes correspondence regarding its activities and services. If you have expertise in an area of practice in which you are willing to speak or write, please send a resume and a brief writing sample to Todd B. Eberle, Associate Dean and Director of Continuing Legal Education, University of Kentucky College of Law, Suite 260 Law Building, Lexington, KY 40506-0048.

The month of September 1987 saw the addition of Jean M. Moisan to the Office of Continuing Legal Education staff. Her title is that of Assistant Director and her primary responsibility will be in the planning, development, and supervision of the UK/CLE practice handbook series. Ms. Moisan will also be assisting with general CLE operations including work on an expanded list of course offerings for 1987-88. She is a 1986 graduate of the UK College of Law and served most recently as law clerk to Judge Armand Angelucci in Lexington. She is a native of Dearborn, Michigan, received her undergraduate education from the University of Michigan and a master’s degree in English from Western Kentucky University where she served as a faculty member in the English Department for six years prior to entering law school. During law school Ms. Moisan had work experience with The Federal Correctional Institute, Fayette Circuit Court and Kentucky Legal Services.

Kentucky Law Journal Sponsors Constitutional Symposium On Impeachment and Discipline of Judges

On October 12, 1987, the Kentucky Law Journal sponsored a Constitutional Symposium on Impeachment and Discipline of Judges. The speakers for the program were invited by Professor John H. Garvey, who gave the introductory remarks and introduced each speaker.

"This is a bicentennial celebration that does not involve fireworks, parades, old costumes or tall ships," said Professor Garvey in opening the Symposium. "It is the kind of festivity that suits an academic community — one concerned with the intellectual life of our Constitution."

Professor Garvey went on to point out that in comparison with the absence of such proceedings in the past, "impeachment of federal judges has become a growth industry." He cited the removal from the bench of Chief Judge Harry Claiborne of the District of Nevada, convicted in 1984 for tax evasion, the 1986 conviction of Chief Judge Walter Nixon of Mississippi for perjury, which may lead to impeachment proceedings, and the recommendation to Congress by the U.S. Judicial Conference in 1987 that Miami District Judge Alcee Hastings be impeached. As Professor Garvey stated, these cases raise "a number of difficult questions. We hope that this symposium will stimulate thought about them, and perhaps even point us down the right road in a few instances."

Senator Mitch McConnell '67 was an opening speaker. He presented "Reflections on the Senate's Role in Judicial Impeachments." Senator McConnell's observations were made from his perspective as a former member of the Senate Judiciary Committee.

Stephen B. Burbank, a professor at the University of Pennsylvania Law School, is regarded as the leading authority on federal judicial impeachment and discipline. His presentation, "Alternative Career Resolution: An Essay on the Removal of Federal Judges," provided a critical analysis of current arrangements and proposed alternatives concerning the process for removal of federal judges.

Bradley C. Canon, a professor from the University of Kentucky College of Law, commented on Professor Burbank's presentation. He also illustrated the problem of trying to define an impeachable offense.

Reid Weingarten presented "Judicial Misconduct: A Perspective from the Justice Department." A lawyer with the Public Integrity Section of the Department of Justice, Weingarten was the lead counsel in the prosecution of two federal judges. He noted that the Public Integrity Section receives many allegations against federal officials, but that "nothing captures the attention of the Justice Department quite like serious allegations against a federal judge." However, according to Weingarten, "serious allegations against federal judges are few and far between."

Weingarten also rebutted the argument that a criminal investigation against a judge threatens the independence of the federal judiciary. He explained, "Before a federal judge is convicted, there are so many procedural hurdles and so many procedural steps that it seems to me extraordinarily unlikely that there could ever be a vindictive prosecution of a federal judge because the Justice Department didn't like him."

Ronald D. Rotunda, a professor from the University of Illinois College of Law, has written several legal textbooks and has served as a lawyer on the Senate Watergate Committee. Professor Rotunda presented "An Essay on the Constitutional Parameters of Federal Impeachment." His presentation focused on the role of history in shaping the impeachment process. He also analyzed in detail the language of impeachment in the Constitution.

Professor Richard H. Underwood of the College of Law faculty commented on Professor Rotunda's presentation. Underwood reviewed the scholarly works on impeachment in discussing the constitutional language. He concluded that Professor Rotunda gave "a succinct and thorough treatment of all the major issues in impeachment."

Michael Remington, Counsel for the House Judiciary Committee, presented "Judicial Discipline in Legislative Perspective." Remington spoke about the Judicial Discipline Act of 1980 and about the possibility of amending this legislation. He explained, "The Congressional perspective is popularly characterized as a big picture perspective, and it visualizes a much broader view than that from a judge's window or a prosecutor's chair or a law student's desk." Remington concluded that the 1980 Act, as a compromise among the three branches of government, "is working tolerably well."

Jeffrey M. Shaman was the final speaker. He is a law professor from DePaul University and directs the Center for Judicial Conduct Organizations. Professor Shaman presented his article, "State Judicial Conduct Organizations." He provided a helpful outlook on the Symposium topic, because the state mechanisms for regulating judicial conduct are more fully developed than the federal system. He described the organization of state judicial conduct systems and articulated the advantages and the disadvantages of such organizations.

The Kentucky Law Journal will publish articles building on the Symposium presentations in the Spring Issue of the 1987-88 Volume.

A Plea for News

The Review would like to know what you would like to read about. If you have ideas for news articles you feel may be of interest to UK law alumni, please send them to Associate Dean Drusilla Vansant, College of Law Building, Lexington, Kentucky 40506-0048.

Interested In Holding a Class Reunion?

The College of Law would like to help interested alumni organize reunions of their class members. If you are interested in holding a reunion for your class in 1988, please contact Associate Dean Drusilla Vansant, phone (606) 257-8320. Her office can help you locate and notify class members, plan reunion functions, set up an account for reunion finances and in any other way you feel you would like some assistance.
