The Mineral Law Center began publication of the Journal of Mineral Law & Policy in 1984. Since that time we have striven to publish a high quality refereed law journal committed to the examination and clarification of issues related to minerals, other natural resources and the environment.

During these past ten years we have been ably assisted by our Editorial Advisory Board, student editors and staff. Research Associates Suzanne Fong, William H. Gorin, and Blair P. Bremberg also made major contributions towards the development and improvement of the JMLP during their two-year terms with the Mineral Law Center. The Mineral Law Center was conceptualized during former Dean Tom Lewis's tenure as Dean and implemented by his successor, former Dean Robert G. Lawson.

On July 1, 1992, the Journal of Mineral Law & Policy became the Journal of Natural Resources & Environmental Law. This name change was made after extensive consultation with our Editorial Advisory Board, our faculty and natural resources and environmental professionals. The name change reflects our Journal's historical scope of coverage and more accurately reflects the continuing evolution of its scope of interest.

Our renamed Journal will continue to address mineral topics as well as other natural resource and environmental issues. The Journal will continue to be committed to the examination of current topical issues related to the law, science and policy aspects of natural resources and the environment.

We thank readers for their interest and support.
