Colonialism Game

Nicole Margaretten

DOI: https://doi.org/10.13023/disclosure.13.04

Follow this and additional works at: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure

Part of the Art and Design Commons, and the Photography Commons

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial 4.0 License.

Recommended Citation

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by disClosure: A Journal of Social Theory. Questions about the journal can be sent to disclosurejournal@gmail.com

---. Gingerly inter-Locked Ody sseys, Born Against Lonely and Isolated 'Z's— Abandoned To Invisibly Opaque Nullity 34

Angela Yong Chwee Yun National University of Singapore Singapore

Colonialism Game
Colonialism Game

During an attempt to board a small whaling boat, naval forces focus upon you. In order to save face, you shocked five of their children and decide that you are not welcome on the island. Deduct five points.

Fruit taken from Botanical Island has long been depleted. Looms develop upon your gates and you feel your teeth begin to loosen. Deduct two points.

Ospreys have blood-washed five of your men to death. A trade begins to look promising, you notice that your wife has been staked. You see a man running away and you shoot him in the back. Deduct one point.

The seventeen chickens that washed off the dock provide even greater mortality. Deduct four points.

Convinced waters cause you and your men to become sick. The seventeen chickens that washed off the dock provide even greater mortality. Deduct four points.

DisClosures 13
Rethinking Politics, Scholarship, and Economics: disclosure Interviews David F. Ruccio

Dr. David F. Ruccio is currently Associate Professor of Economics in the Faculty of Economics' Department of Economics and Policy Studies at the University of Notre Dame. He visited the University of Kentucky in February 2003 to participate in the Spring Seminar and Lecture Series on Globalization sponsored by the UK Committee on Social Theory. His lecture entitled "Globalization and Imperialism" explored the intellectual and material foundations of globalization discourses. In particular, he challenged the "depressing inevitability" of these discourses by connecting their production to specific intellectuals and policy makers and by re-envisioning them through the Marxian concepts of imperialism and the "imperial machine."

Consistently defying dominant notions of what an economist should be and should study, Ruccio has investigated a multitude of topics that can be broadly gathered under the category of radical political economy. While his earlier writings focused intensely upon the economics of development and underdevelopment, Ruccio has more recently pursued questions of value, subjectivity, and the changing dynamics of class in economic systems raised by postmodernism and poststructuralism. He has also written about the production of economic knowledge both within the field of economics and in its variation across other disciplines. In addition, he continues to be a key figure in the ongoing project to reconceptualize the Marxian tradition and currently edits the