Blue coffee

poem

a wash of colors
awash with color
I worship
I drink brown coffee
brown below blue
I dance toward the toaster and strangely enough I don't think of you as in Africa but out of blackness and below blue
a pale memory cries
from years
I will let fall through blacknesses see me singing with the brown coffee outside the blue washes me clean who dares not think this could've been you
