Editor’s Preface and Acknowledgements

Aimee Imlay
University of Kentucky

Matthew Wentz
University of Kentucky

DOI: https://doi.org/10.13023/disclosure.29.01

Follow this and additional works at: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure

Part of the Arts and Humanities Commons, and the Social and Behavioral Sciences Commons

This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial 4.0 License.

Recommended Citation

DOI: https://doi.org/10.13023/disclosure.29.01

Available at: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure/vol29/iss1/2

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Social Theory at UKnowledge. It has been accepted for inclusion in disClosure: A Journal of Social Theory by an authorized editor of UKnowledge. For more information, please contact UKnowledge@lsv.uky.edu.
 disclosed
A Journal of Social Theory

Volume 29

Populism

Edited by Aimee Imlay and Matthew Wentz
Table of Contents

viii  Editor’s Preface and Acknowledgements
     Aimee Imlay and Matthew Wentz

1  Poems on the Effects of 21st Century Populism
    Jason David Peterson

4  “You Cannot Slaughter Ideas”: Liberalism and the State of Exception in Argentina
    Arlo Elliot

18  Making the People
    An Interview with Paulina Ochoa Espejo
    David Cortés Ferrández and Sandra Nava Nieto

24  Social Solidarity and the Ontological Foundations of Exclusionary Nationalism: Durkheim and Levinas on the Historical Manifestations of Authoritarian Populism
    C.J. Eland and Nicole L.M.T. de Pontes

39  Reflections from a Lifetime of Activism
    An Interview with Chip Berlet.
    Kendell Sewell, Matthew Wentz and Austin Zinkle

48  Nationalpopulism, Right and Left: The Social-National Synthesis Today
    Daniel Rueda

64  Populism as a Logic of Coincidences
    An Interview with Maria Pia Lara
    Katie Henning, Aimee Imlay and Lilía Malavé Gómez

74  The 2016 Bernie Sanders Campaign: American Socialist Populism
    Judson C. Abraham
Understanding Populism Through Difference: The Significance of Economic and Social Axes
An Interview with Kenneth Roberts
Kayla Bohannon and Alina Hechler

We Are Right, They Are Wrong: The Antagonistic Relationship Between Populism and Discourses of (Un)Truthfulness
Michael Hameleers

Reactionary Populism and the Historical Erosion of Democracy in America.
An Interview with Nancy Maclean
Aimee Imlay and Matthew Wentz

Adorno’s Critique of the New Right-Wing Extremism: How (Not) to Face the Past, Present, and Future
Harry F. Dahms
2019 – 2020 discloser Collective

David Cortés Ferrández is a PhD candidate in Hispanic Studies at the University of Kentucky. His research focuses on Discourse Analysis and the Catalan Independence Crisis. He is also an instructor of Spanish in the same department.

Aimee Imlay is a PhD student in the department of Sociology at the University of Kentucky. Her research interests include social theory, poverty, the welfare state and social policy. Currently, she is researching food insecurity within SNAP ineligible households.

Lilia Malavé Gómez is a PhD candidate in the Department of Hispanic Studies at the University of Kentucky. Her main research interests are rhetorical representation of Latin Americans and Latinos in cultural products, Spanish sociolinguistic variation, and language attitudes in media. A Venezuelan native, she is especially interested in the telenovela genre.

Abby Rudolph is a MA candidate in Literature at the University of Kentucky. Her research interests include eco-criticism, critical ecology, and post-colonial theory. Abby lives in Louisville, where she works as a community garden organizer and food justice advocate. In the fall of 2020, she will begin a PhD in Urban and Public Affairs at the University of Louisville.

Morgan Keith Stewart is a 3rd-year PhD student in the Hispanic Studies Department specializing in nineteenth-century Spanish literature. His current research focuses on the role of fantastic short fiction in interrogating or upholding dogmatic discourses.

Jessica Van Gilder is a PhD student in English at the University of Kentucky. Her primary research interests include cognitive approaches to literary studies, narrative theory, and cognitive cultural studies. She is especially interested in the relationship between epistemology, the phenomenology of reading, and manifestations of fictionality in the transatlantic development of the novel. She also works on an interdisciplinary research project that investigates the cognitive processing of fictionality and nonfictionality.
Matthew Wentz is a PhD candidate in English at the University of Kentucky. His research focuses on the intersection of the private and domestic spheres in early modern dramas, especially Shakespeare and Middleton. He is an instructor in the department of Writing, Rhetoric, and Digital Studies at UK.
Editors’ Preface and Acknowledgements

Aimee Imlay and Matthew Wentz
Editors-in-Chief, University of Kentucky

The 2019-2020 disClosure collective is thrilled to present the 29th volume of disClosure: A Journal of Social Theory. This volume focuses on theories of populism and brings together a wide range of perspectives relating to the phenomenon, experience, and study of populism. The recent uptick in populism signals political, economic, and/or social unrest across the globe, yet, populism remains a phenomenon that is difficult to define. Our goal with this volume was not to define populism. Instead, this issue engages conversations about the various types and origins of populisms, as it is our belief that the development and definition of populism is both historically and socially contingent.

The articles, artwork, and poetry contained in this volume illuminate the various conceptualizations and understandings of populism as well as the historical and social conditions which foster populism. Topics include left-wing populism in the United States, the relationship between populism and truth, national populism, the theoretical and ontological roots of authoritarian populism, and much more.

We present interviews with the four scholars invited to the University of Kentucky’s Committee on Social Theory 2019 Spring Lecture Series: Chip Berlet, Paulina Ochoa-Espejo, Kenneth Roberts and Maria Pia Lara. In addition, this volume contains an interview with Nancy Maclean, the Fall 2019 Social Theory Distinguished Speaker. In these interviews many themes emerged including the importance of a conceptual distinction between types of populism, the relationship between billionaires and the erosion of liberal democracy, right-wing extremism, the emergence of populism in the United States and the link between ‘the People’ and populism.

This volume is a result of the conversations inspired by University of Kentucky professors Stefan Bird-Pollan (Philosophy), Carol Mason (Gender and Women’s Studies), Yanira Paz (Hispanic Studies) and Carlos de la Torre (Sociology) in the Social Theory 600: Multidisciplinary Perspectives in Social Theory capstone course during Spring 2019. The course explored populism from a historical and comparative perspective and shaped the development of this volume. We are indebted to the professors’ expertise and perspectives in this course.
We wish to extend our gratitude to Stefan Bird-Pollan who served as the faculty advisor for the disClosure collective this year. We thank you for your invaluable support, guidance and for introducing us to Han Woo Ri where we will be sure to enjoy many more meals in the future.

We would also like to thank the University of Kentucky’s Committee on Social Theory for its support, particularly the Committee’s Director, Tad Mutersbaugh. We also thank Adrian Ho, Director of Digital Scholarship at UK Libraries for his support throughout this process.

We are grateful to the disClosure editorial collective members who graciously worked on this journal on top of research, coursework, teaching and personal responsibilities. Finally, thank you to our contributors and artists for sharing your perspectives and your work with us.