Dear Sarah:

I have just received a letter from Corinne about the election of a vice president and president-elect for the coming term. It seems to me that ordinarily the president-elect takes over and completes the unexpired term of her predecessor and then goes on to serve her time for which she was elected.

As I look at the Constitution, this is not specifically stated, but I am sure this was contemplated when the Constitution was drafted. This would mean that Corinne would serve the remainder of Jane's unexpired term and her own term which begins at the annual meeting. If my understanding of this is correct, I do not see that there is any necessity for an election prior to the annual meeting.

I have not written to Corinne and will wait to hear your reaction before writing her. Hope things are going well with you.

Sincerely,

Mary W. Oliver
