The College of Law of the University of Kentucky is about to enter upon the second epoch of its history. The dream of its founders and of those who are working for its expansion is about to become true. Within another year it is expected to be housed in a building of its own, thoroughly equipped and arranged in every way to take care of its every need and of its rapid growth in student body.

The University is expected to obtain possession of a certain percentage of the funds collected by the State from the inheritance tax upon the Bingham estate. This will amount to something over $100,000.00. With this amount available the University will complete the erection of the New Chemistry Building, thus making the Old Chemistry Building available for the use of the College of Law. The new chemistry building is expected to be completed some time during the spring or summer, after which the old chemistry building will be renovated and the rooms rearranged to suit the needs of the College of Law. The lower or basement floor will probably be fitted up to contain the offices and editorial rooms of the Law Journal, the Henry Clay Literary Society, and law fraternities. The second or main floor will probably contain the dean's office and the law library. The third floor will be specially fitted up for law class rooms and for a practice and moot court. It is expected that it will be ready for occupancy by Christmas.

The news of this contemplated move has been received by the faculty and students of the College of Law with great rejoicing and we feel sure that the friends of the college and especially the members of the bar who have received their training here will rejoice with us. The College of Law has long been cramped for the want of space and proper equipment.

This move is expected to be of benefit not only to the present and future students of the College of Law, but also to the entire membership of the State bar. Judge Chalkley, in his statement regarding the coming summer session, has told of the plans to make the summer school fit the wants of the members of the bar who feel the need of a little more technical training which is to be obtained only in law schools, or to fit the needs of those students who are contemplating the study of law and wish to obtain some of the fundamentals of the law before actually entering the College of Law. A great number of the present practicing members of the bar have not had the opportunity to study and become acquainted with the fundamental basis and technical side of the law. It is planned to make courses of special interest to such, and the College of Law will be the better enabled to do this after it has been moved into more spacious quarters.

We feel sure that a great future of good and useful service to the State is about to open to the College of Law.
