Errata for disClosure 19 (2010): Consuming Culture

DOI: https://doi.org/10.13023/disclosure.20.17

Follow this and additional works at: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure
This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial 4.0 License.

Recommended Citation
DOI: https://doi.org/10.13023/disclosure.20.17
Available at: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure/vol20/iss1/17

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Social Theory at UKnowledge. It has been accepted for inclusion in disClosure: A Journal of Social Theory by an authorized editor of UKnowledge. For more information, please contact UKnowledge@lsv.uky.edu.
Errata for disClosure 19 (2010): Consuming Culture

Erratum
This Errata provides the Works Cited for the disClosure article "Consumed with (and by) Collecting: Museology as Narrative Strategy" from v. 19. That article can be found at http://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure/vol19/iss1/3/

This article is available in disClosure: A Journal of Social Theory: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure/vol20/iss1/17
Errata
disClosure 19 (2010): Consuming Cultures

The editors of disClosure 19 would like to extend our sincere apologies to Gretchen Henderson and our readers for our inadvertent omission of the Works Cited for her "Consumed with (and by) Collecting: Museology as Narrative Strategy" in last year's issue. The omitted pages are printed below:

Works Cited

According to some readings of the Mayan calendar, the world as we know it will end in 2012. In light of the current climate of economic crisis, ecological disaster, and renewed social divisions, cultural critics such as Slavoj Žižek have suggested that we are indeed "living in the end times." The second volume of Nomenclatura: aproximaciones a los estudios hispánicos, an annual online academic journal published by the graduate students of the Department of Hispanic Studies at the University of Kentucky, invites contributors to reflect on apocalypse and the end times as they are presented in literature, film, and a vast array of other cultural forms in the Hispanic world. The journal welcomes original submissions using interdisciplinary approaches from scholars working on Spain, Latin America, and the Hispanic diaspora from the medieval period to the present.

Topics may include but are not limited to:
- Economic and ecological crisis
- Pre-Columbian myth and belief systems
- Technology and the end of literature?
- Post-Humanism and other Post-isms
- Violence and genocide
- (Pseudo)science and science fiction
- Eschatology and religion
- Utopia and dystopia
- Decadence and the fin de siècle
- The occult and the supernatural

Nomenclatura seeks original manuscripts of 15-30 pages in English or Spanish. Please submit an electronic copy of the manuscript as a Microsoft Word attachment to nomenclaturauk@gmail.com by October 15, 2011. The document should be in 12-point, Times New Roman font and double spaced. For other formatting questions, please see our website: http://uknowledge.uky.edu/naeh. The manuscript should not include identifying information. Please submit a separate cover sheet with the title of the article and the author's name, e-mail address, and institutional affiliation.