Gray Zeitz learned the craft of hand printing from Carolyn Hammer at the King Library Press. He founded Larkspur Press in 1974, setting up in the rear of a Monterey candle shop, with "a couple of fonts" of type and a press given to him by Mrs. Hammer. The Bittersweet Bindery was established next door, and work on Bluegrass commenced. When Deborah Bosley, of the Bittersweet Bindery left the area, Zeitz became reacquainted with Carolyn Whitesel, an artist who had also served an apprenticeship at the King Library Press with Mrs. Hammer. Since 1984, Whitesel has bound special editions, made marbled and paste papers for bindings, and most recently has written, illustrated, and co-published A Mute Circle of Shine.

In the early years of the Larkspur, Zeitz raised tobacco and sought grant funding to keep the press going. Now, commissioned works are becoming more frequent, and job printing is a steady business; he also teaches part-time at the Portland Elementary School in Louisville. He gave up tobacco farming in 1983. Zeitz enjoys the process of printing as much as the outcome; according to his wife, Jean, the lights of the press are often the first to come on in Monterey, and he checks every sheet that comes off the press for quality. Although he espouses no particular philosophy for the press, saying he publishes what he likes, Zeitz selects authors to work with, pointing out that "you don't have a Thomas Merton or a Robert Aitken or a Wendell Berry manuscript all the time."

Most publications are issued in regular and special editions. Regular editions are usually printed on Mohawk letterpress paper and bound in cloth-covered boards or soft covers. For soft cover editions bound at the press, Zeitz favors Japanese sewing, a side-sewing technique which results in a very sturdy binding.
Gray Zeitz at his Larkspur Press in Monterey, Kentucky.

Special editions are most frequently printed on Iyo Glazed paper and bound by hand. Larkspur Press editions are sought by collectors of fine press books, as well as by collectors of specific authors, such as Berry or Guy Davenport.

Zeitz was born in 1949 in Alabama, but grew up in Kentucky; he attended Elizabethtown Community College and the University of Kentucky, where he published handsel, a literary journal. He lives in Monterey, in Owen County, with his wife Jean, and children Jesse and Laurel.
