October 2014

Frontiers in PHSSR is on the Move

F. Douglas Scutchfield
University of Kentucky, scutch@uky.edu

Follow this and additional works at: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/frontiersinphssr

Part of the Health and Medical Administration Commons, Health Policy Commons, Health Services Administration Commons, and the Health Services Research Commons

Recommended Citation
DOI: 10.13023/FPHSSR.0304.08

This Editorial is brought to you for free and open access by the Center for Public Health Systems and Services Research at UKnowledge. It has been accepted for inclusion in Frontiers in Public Health Services and Systems Research by an authorized administrator of UKnowledge. For more information, please contact UKnowledge@lsv.uky.edu.
Frontiers in PHSSR is on the Move

ABSTRACT

Recently, Dr. Jenine Harris and her colleagues examined the use of journals by state chronic disease prevention staff to stay up-to-date on public health evidence. We, at Frontiers in PHSSR, are pleased to be included among the journals listed in the survey. Online open-access journals are shifting the paradigm of scientific publication, allowing free and rapid exchange of information. Another illustration of Frontier's increasing utility is a forthcoming issue of the American Journal of Public Health (AJPH). We are pleased that AJPH has agreed to publish selected abstracts from Frontiers in PHSSR in their regular issue with links to the full articles available in our online journal.

Keywords
Frontiers in Public Health Services and Systems Research, PHSSR, Open Access
Recently, Dr. Jenine Harris and her colleagues examined the use of journals by state chronic disease prevention staff to stay up-to-date on public health evidence. As might be expected, the top three journals consulted were the American Journal of Public Health, the Morbidity and Mortality Weekly Report, and Preventing Chronic Disease. Two of these top three were online open-access journals. We, at Frontiers in PHSSR, are pleased to be included among the journals listed in the survey. While we didn’t rank in the top three, our inclusion on the list speaks well to our efforts to speed the timely and relevant information about PHSSR to our readers—practitioners, policymakers, and other researchers. Online open-access journals are shifting the paradigm of scientific publication, allowing free and rapid exchange of information.

Another illustration of Frontiers in PHSSR’s increasing utility is a forthcoming issue of the American Journal of Public Health (AJPH). We are pleased that AJPH has agreed to publish selected abstracts from Frontiers in PHSSR in their regular issue with links to the full articles available in our online journal. As mentioned in the article cited above, AJPH is the lead journal read by chronic disease practitioners. Inclusion in AJPH will provide additional visibility for Frontiers in PHSSR and make our publication even more attractive to the field of public health professionals. The collaboration between AJPH and Frontiers in PHSSR is a classic example of win–win scientific journalism. We want to express our thanks and appreciation to the editorial leadership of AJPH for this opportunity and the visibility it provides for our journal. This follows efforts on our part to also link to the Annual Review of Public Health, another successful illustration of synergy in our publication strategy. We are also pleased that a top Institute for Scientific Information (ISI)–ranked journal sought us out to establish this relationship.

The staff of Frontiers in PHSSR has substantial experience in scientific publication and is dedicated to the success of the journal. They continually support the efforts to promote Frontiers in PHSSR to the forefront of public health information and to increase its utility to the communities that it serves. Readers, authors, friends, and fellow followers should know that we remain committed to assuring that Frontiers in PHSSR becomes a go to journal for the field of PHSSR. As we strive to produce a first-rate journal, we remain open to suggestions and ideas from all our constituents. We look forward to hearing from you.

REFERENCES