At Long Last the Rain

GTimothy Gordon
DOI: https://doi.org/10.13023/disclosure.13.10

Follow this and additional works at: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure

Part of the Creative Writing Commons
This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial 4.0 License.

Recommended Citation
DOI: https://doi.org/10.13023/disclosure.13.10
Available at: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure/vol13/iss1/10

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Social Theory at UKnowledge. It has been accepted for inclusion in disClosure: A Journal of Social Theory by an authorized editor of UKnowledge. For more information, please contact UKnowledge@lsv.uky.edu.
At long last the rain over T'ai-chung City.
Would the grey greyness never end?
Would what white fog does to us at dusk
When we come home from tending the fields,
Alleys and arcane lanes of Pachinko parlors and sweetshops,
Filled with the smoky iron of lotus and coarse oolong tea,
Summoned afar to suburbs like spirits from abroad,
Wrapped in iceblue slickers, moist with the first wet winter frost,
Unlocking our blue doors, enflesh us men and women,
Clearing the City of selling, buying, and bought?