The founding of The King Library Press may be dated from 1956 when several librarians working on their noon hour at the University of Kentucky's M.I.King Library produced a small book. Today, the Press, in the Department of Special Collections, is a publishing and teaching institution devoted to the continuation of book production by way of the handpress as tool. All composition, presswork and case binding are done at the Press. There are positions for the full-time director, four part-time assistants and several apprentices.

Four Washington Presses, one now endowed by Joseph C. Graves, Sr. at whose Gravesend Press it had been used, and the wooden Common Press designed and used by Victor Hammer in Florence are the basic tools. All aspects of book production by hand are promoted as part of the educational program of the Press. The influence of Carolyn R. Hammer, a founder and until the middle of 1976 the press director, and the typographic tradition to be seen in the works of Victor Hammer provide inspiration for the work of The King Library Press.

The issue of computers is one that concerns us all. It is a question of how we can use these powerful tools to improve the quality of our lives. The debate often centers around whether computers are a blessing or a curse. On one hand, they have the potential to revolutionize the way we work, learn, and communicate. On the other hand, there are concerns about job displacement, privacy, and security.

The potential benefits of computers are undeniable. They can help us to access information quickly and efficiently. They can also facilitate collaboration and creativity. However, the negative consequences of technology must also be considered. The fear of job displacement is a legitimate concern, and it is important to ensure that workers are trained to use these tools effectively.

Privacy is another critical issue. With the increasing use of technology, personal data is more vulnerable than ever. It is essential that we protect our privacy and ensure that our data is used ethically.

Security is also a concern. As technology becomes more advanced, so do the methods used to exploit it. It is crucial that we develop robust security measures to protect ourselves and our systems.

In conclusion, computers are a double-edged sword. While they offer tremendous benefits, we must also be aware of the potential harms. By taking a responsible approach to technology, we can ensure that it serves us well for generations to come.
The University of Kentucky Library Associates

The University of Kentucky Library Associates were organized in November 1954 and reactivated in January 1977. They are an organization of library-minded alumni, faculty, students, and friends who take a special interest in the resources and activities of the University Libraries. By their annual gifts and contributions, the Associates help the Libraries acquire special research materials—books, manuscripts, family papers, and the like—that could not be included in the regular library budget.

Each year the Associates organize a number of activities for the public and the membership. They also sponsor in part the publishing and teaching programs of The King Library Press, the hand press in the Department of Special Collections. Publications of the Press are offered to members at a twenty-percent discount. A subscription to the Associates’ journal, The Kentucky Review, is provided free to members.

Membership is open to anyone contributing annually fifteen dollars or more (five dollars for students) in cash or library materials. For further information write The Secretary, The Library Associates, University of Kentucky Libraries, Lexington, KY 40506.
