4-15-1993

Preface and Contents

Caedmon Staddon
University of Kentucky

Greg Howard
University of Kentucky
DOI: https://doi.org/10.13023/DISCLOSURE.02.01

Follow this and additional works at: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure

Part of the Arts and Humanities Commons, and the Social and Behavioral Sciences Commons
This work is licensed under a Creative Commons Attribution-Noncommercial 4.0 License.

Recommended Citation
DOI: https://doi.org/10.13023/DISCLOSURE.02.01
Available at: https://uknowledge.uky.edu/disclosure/vol2/iss1/1

This Article is brought to you for free and open access by the Social Theory at UKnowledge. It has been accepted for inclusion in disClosure: A Journal of Social Theory by an authorized editor of UKnowledge. For more information, please contact UKnowledge@lsv.uky.edu.
"the buying and selling of culture"

AMERICA is products making better people disClosure is a journal of social theory published by the Committee on Social Theory at the University of Kentucky. The funding for this issue was provided by UK's College of Arts and Sciences, Student Activities Board, and the Vice President for Research and Graduate Studies. Editorial advice and support was provided by faculty at UK.

Editorial Collective
M. Martin Bosman
Leslie Hazelwood
Greg Howard
Wolfgang Natter
Erik Keece
Ted Schatzki
Cedmon Staddon
Kakie Urch

Editors Autumn 1992 issue: Greg Howard and Cedmon Staddon

Printed by UK Printing Services; typeset by C. Staddon; copyright © 1992, ISSN # 1055-6133

Subscription Information:
Libraries and Institutions: $10 per issue
Individuals: $5 per issue

Send Inquiries, Submissions and Subscriptions to:
disClosure: a journal of social theory
106 Student Center
University of Kentucky
Lexington, KY 40506
(606) 257-1861 or 257-7107
E-MAIL: disClosure@UKCC.UKY.EDU

Preface and Contents

It is with great pleasure that we deliver this edition of disClosure to you, hot off the proverbial press! Following an enthusiastic reception of our inaugural edition, devoted to the theme of “Rethinking Contemporary Mythologies”, we received a large number of excellent and creative submissions for this second edition, on “The Buying and Selling of Culture”. We are also pleased to be already be receiving queries and outlines of material being prepared for our next edition, which will examine “Fin de Siecle Democracy” - See the inside of the back cover for more details!

Since disClosure was inaugurated a year and a half ago, we have endeavoured to produce a journal which is interdisciplinary and even experimental in nature. We are aware that standard academic modes of discourse delimit that scope of what can be said, often in unhelpful, and disciplining, ways. In this we recognise the exercise of power implicit in Pierre Macherey’s observation that “For some things to be said, there are others which must not be said”.

In this edition of disClosure you will find poems by Micheal Palmer and Eileen Myles as well as letters from Myles outlining the platform for her U.S. presidential candidacy. In different ways these pieces are concerned with the complex constitution of discourses about the body and national politics (Myles), and about the relationship between aesthetics and the commodity form (Palmer).

Douglas Kellner’s essay, excerpted from his newly published book The Persian Gulf TV War, examines the subtle and not so subtle ways in which the Pentagon and the Oval Office manipulated media coverage of the US military build-up in the Persian Gulf. In ways which resonate with Noam Chomsky’s Manufacturing Consent, Kellner implies not just that overt manipulation of the press took place, but that the very modalities of contemporary media seem predisposed towards such systematic distortion.

Gary Weisman’s essay on conservative interpretations of the “politically correct” takes up some of these same issues. Looking at a number of recent discussions of PC in the popular press, Weisman argues that conservative ideologues have created a hegemonic discourse about PC which portrays it as a profoundly totalising and fanatical social moment - “a radical cant”. By reducing the debate to such arcanas as “do I say ‘pet’ instead of ‘animal companion?’”, this conservative discourse seeks to derail any constructive attempt to broaden the human conversation.

T.S. McMillin detects a different sort of interpretive impulse in the remarkable popularity of advice and ‘how-to’ guides aimed at human relationships.
Taking Leo Buscaglia’s commercially successful Love (1972) as an archetype, he analyses the ways in which Buscaglia renders love as “a commodity equivalent in status to frozen peas, floor wax, and vine ripe tomatoes” (p.46).

Two more essays, by Trey Strecker and Amy Weissman, examine the ways in which cultural boundaries are manipulated to criticise orthodox, mainstream ideas. Weissman deconstructs aspects of the complex intersection of race and sexuality as they are represented in Jennie Livingston’s Paris is Burning. Strecker examines Don DeLillo’s recent forays in White Noise into the notion that the process of commodification has at last achieved the complete colonisation of the (post)modern subject. The difference between the two essays though, is that in the latter the protagonist assimilates himself into the “white noise” of the atopic “hyperreal”, while in the former, the men of The Ball carefully negotiate the nihilisms of both total assimilation and total marginalisation.

Michael Pinsky contributes an essay examining the Disney Corporation’s recent venture, Pleasure Island, where happy consumer drones can obtain, for a price of course, the anaesthetic effects of participation in a completely artificial historical narrative.

Some of the art which is included in this edition was commissioned especially for disClosure. Lexington artists Jim Shambu and those at the PELCE and dadata collectives have contributed several creations which use popular images in a critical and, even, counter hegemonic fashion. The editorial collective is especially pleased to be able to publish such excellent and thematically appropriate art works.

All the volumes selected for review deal with some aspect of commodification and popular culture. We have tried to move more towards the publication of review essays, which by treating several texts in conjunction with one another, reveal much more about each text than would a more standard sort of review.

Again, we are very pleased to present our latest edition of disClosure. We invite any and all interested persons to consider submitting work for publication in our next edition, which will be on the theme of “Fin de Siecle Democracy”.

For assistance in the preparation of this issue special thanks go out to Virginia Blum, Peter Mortensen, Jim Wilkinson, Janet Hayes, Michael Palmer, John Pickles and Ernie Yanarella. Thanks also to Chris Carneal and PELCE for the art used on the cover of this issue.

Caedmon Staddon and Greg Howard, Editors for Issue #2
Preface and Contents

Overview: current debates in critical social theory

Kai Nielsen

Review Essays

Erik Reece on Marjorie Perloff's Radical Artifice 133

Greg Howard on Drucilla Cornell's Beyond Accommodation, Gunnar Olsson's Lines of Power/Limits of Language and Rose Subotnik's Developing Variations 138

Kakie Urch on Celeste Olalquiaga’s Megalopolis and John Tomlinson’s Cultural Imperialism 144

Jim White on Grossberg, Nelson and Treichler’s Cultural Studies 148

Craig Drennen on C. Mamiya’s Pop Art and Consumer Culture 153

dadata, Artwork: The Doors of Perception 156

Caedmon Stadden on Mike Davis’ City of Quartz 157

Contributors:

dadata
Stillwater, Pennsylvania

Douglas Kellner
Dept of Philosophy, Univ. of Texas at Austin

T.S. McMillin
Dept of English, Oberlin College

Eileen Myles
Poet and Performance Artist, New York, NY

Michael Palmer
Poet, San Francisco, California

PELCE
Lexington, Kentucky

Michael Pinsky
Dept of English, Univ. of South Florida

Jim Shambu
Artist, Lexington, Kentucky

Trey Strecker
Dept of English, Ball State University

Amy Weismann
Bryn Mawr College

Gary Weissman
Modern Studies Programme, Univ. of Wisconsin at Milwaukee